PARLIAMENTARY HUMORS. Lord North's Interruption by a New Member. The house of commons now scruples to adjourn on account of derby day; but in early times it indulged in a holiday upon occasions which modern readers must consider still more strangely inadequate. Horace Walpole mentions in his memoirs that in March, 1751, the house adjourned to attend at Drury Lane theater, where Othello was to be noted by a Mr. Delayal and his family. Again, in February, 1781, a bill introduced by Mr. Burke, with reference to the civil list, was read a first time: but the second reading was deferred to that day fortnight. Decause the 21st was to be a feast duy, and the und was the ben-efit of Mme. Vestris, the favorite French duncer at the opera."

Even when in session, says Chambers' Journal, the house was much given to ansuse itself with petty or frivolous incidents, as is shown by some isingular entries preserved in the official frecords. Under date May, 1804, it is noted that a jackdaw flow in at the window. This was considered ominous, and apparently it proved a bad omen for the bill in debate, as the measure was soon afterward rejected. Again, we are told by the veracious state chronler that in May, 1614, "a dog came into the house, a strange spaniel,

About one hundred and seventy years later it is recorded that another canine intruder entered the house, taking his seat before the speaker and all the government. Not content to remain a silent spectator, the dog joined in the proceedings by barking loudly. Lord North, then prime minister, was speaking, and jocularly appealed to the speaker, saying: "Sir, I am interrupted by a new member." The dog, unabashed, did not take the hint, but resumed his backing, whereupon the good-humored premier kept up the joke, protesting that "the new member had no right to speak twice in the same debate." In much more recent times al-most equally triffing episodes have been known to relieve mightily the tedium of political contention.

One day my dirings told me of a fakir who had just come into the little village, who, he said, could perform the After a great deal of ceremony and by dint of a liberal bribe we set about to bury the yellow-skinned old rescal. He was not a very lovable object, and I would have about as little trouble on my conscience in killing himas any human being I ever saw, but I felt like an accessory to a murder as we lowered him into a trench in my garden and heard the plants of earth upon his coffin. He was swathed in bandages from head to frost. He had drawn him self up into a buil, bud rolled buck his tengue into his throat, strifed his curs and postrils with soft wadding, and was apparently dead ten minutes after egan his final preparations.

I put a white guard over that grave night and day for six months. At the end of that time, as agreed, the natives gathered together and I sent for the officers of our mess and we dug him up.

ENCOURAGEMENT TO PRAY. A Lighthouse. Keeper's Rescue from a Per-tions Position in the Nick of Time.

John William Thomas, assistant keeper of the Wolf Trap light station near Norfolk, Va., which succumbed to ice recently, says he had an experience calculated to quicken his wits and open his weather eye. Mr. Thomas was alone at the station, which is in twelve feet of water and three miles from the shore, and the Washington Post finds it easy to appreciate the dreadful forebodings which filled his mind as day after day he watched the thickening ice, conscious as he was of the great peril which environed him, his distress signals unnoticed, with that vast field of ice expending its mighty power against the piles, and gathering additional strength every moment as it overlapped and piled up against the doomed structure. To pray in such a crisis was a most natural thing to do, and pray he did, long and fervently, and he feels assured that his prayers were answered, for it was not very long before he descried in the distance the smoke of a steamer battling with the ice. Slowly she protected along until, getting abreast of the station, she was stopped by the thick ice. Although the steamer was some half mile out toward the ship canal, the nervy keeper determined to abandon the station to its impending fate and make the effort to reach her. Getting upon the untried ice he proceeded toward her, waving his hat to attract the attention of those on board. When within halling distance he called out lustily to the officer in command and was told to come aboard, which he did in safety. On leaving the steamer higher up the bay for the shore he broke through the ice in eight feet of water and came nearly being drowned. Tradition has it that Wolf Trap derived its name from the stranding of the British man-of-war Wolf on the bar during the revolution. The lighthouse is ashore at the capes and the lenses are in Richmond.

STRANGE SOUNDS.

The Largest Animals Do Not Always

Have the Loudest Voices. It is a matter of common observation that the loudest sounds are not always made by the largest animals. The roar of the lion exceeds in sonorousness the cry of the elephant. Anyone who had only heard, without seeing, a bullfrog might well suppose that its fearful ce, breaking the silence of the night, must certainly come from the throat of an animal of formidable dimensions.

But perhaps the most remarkable case of vocal power in an animal is that related by a recent traveler in the high-lands of Borneo. He was informed by natives that they had heard a tiger roaring in the neighborhood. Such news is always startling to a stranger in the jungles of the east, and hardly less so to the natives.

An investigation was accordingly set on foot, which resulted in the discovery that the alarming roars had been emitted by a toad! This tend of Borneo, however, was Ly no means an ordinary member of the family. It measured no less than fourteen and one-half inches round the body.

That the natives should not have recognized the true source of the sound shows that the existence of such toads was either unknown to them, or that, at any rate, they had never discovered the remarkable vocal capabilities of the an-

Birds' Nest Soup-

At a private dinner uptown one of the dishes was birds nest soup. It proved to be a chicken soup with the solid materials strained out and the liquid thickened and enriched by the birds' hard. nests, which were procured of a Chinaman. Old books of travel represent the Asiaties as putting the nests into soups and stews. That is gammon. The birds who make these nests use among other materials, long strands of a tough, whitish seaweed, the strands forming the outer shell or basket of the nest, and by their stickiness assist in securing it to the rock. By the time the birds have emigrated these bits of seaweed are washed clean by rains and are dried by the sun. Then is when they are extracted by Chinese gather ers and made into parcels for sale. They form strips about eight inches long somewhat of the appearance of Iceland moss, light, shiny, translacent, and of
